The origin of the name

The foyer is next to the Anfiteatro Hall which takes its name from the ancient Roman amphitheatre built under the rule of the Emperor Hadrian (II century A.D.) to host gladiator combats. The remains of the building were brought to light in the 19th century: only a small part of the massive structure with an elliptical floor plan that held up to 15,000 spectators on its steps and whose arena was not much smaller than that of the Coliseum. The view of the city from those very steps at that time was rather different to the modern panorama: on one side lay the populated area, on the other, the river Ausa flowing down to the port and the nearby coast.
