The origin of the name

The Borgo Room takes its name from the village, Borgo San Giuliano. The remains of St. Giuliano, one of the patron saints of Rimini, are preserved in the church of the same name that also houses two extraordinary paintings of the saint's martyrdom, one of which is attributed to renowned artist, Paolo Veronese (1578). With its narrow cobbled streets, small quaint squares with fishermen's houses, this is the most characteristic of the four villages in Rimini. Every two years there is a village festival and the facades of many houses are decorated with murals, a great number of which are dedicated to film director, Federico Fellini (Rimini 1920 - Rome 1993), who did not however live in the village.
