The origin of the name

The Vecchia Pescheria Room takes its name from the old fish market which opens onto Piazza Cavour almost like the three naves of a church. The sinuous spirals that unite its surroundings betray its Baroque origins: it was designed in 1747 by Rimini architect, Giovan Francesco Buonamici. As the inscription on its facades recalls, this Porticus Piscarias was funded by the local fishermen themselves whose share was determined in proportion to the size of their boat. For centuries, fish was sold on slabs of Istrian stone in this lively market, washed by the water coming from the four corner fountains in the shape of leaping fish.
